Reality of Ageing

It's to be celebrated that we are living longer, and it's been proven that the increase in our older population will bring many benefits to the Irish economy in the coming years. But we urgently need to invest in the policies and infrastructure that will create a society where ageing at home is comfortable, enjoyable and better for your health.

We have identified these policies through our work with older people across Ireland and by examining international best practice.

Ireland has one of the fastest-ageing populations in the EU.

That makes older people the fastest-growing population group in the country.

We need the next Government to prioritise planning and delivering for our ageing population or risk a significant fall in living standards among this growing strand of the population. We believe in an Ireland where older people can age happily and securely at home and are strongly connected to their local communities.

To achieve this for older people today and into the future, we're telling parties and candidates that their manifestos need to include the commitments outlined in this document.

Age Stat

5 in 8

Our population is set to grow by 800,000 over the next 15 years; five out of every eight of these adults will be 65 or older.

In order of priority

Establish a Commissioner for Older People to work across Government to ensure policy implementation for our ageing population.

Benchmark the State Pension and other benefits to ensure older people's incomes keep pace with the increasing cost of living, particularly for older people living alone.

Develop, fund and execute a strategy to combat loneliness in Ireland.

Identify and plan for the broad spectrum of housing needs of older people; develop targets and measure delivery of housing for older people as part of Housing for All.

Reduce energy poverty among older people by reforming SEAI grants to ensure a just transition that includes Older People and reduces energy poverty

Improve access and funding to the range of community health and social care services provided to older people to support their wellbeing, particularly mental health, home support and day care services.

Implement legislation that will safeguard all against abuse.
